

UNEP is the voice for the environment within the United Nations system. It is an advocate, educator, catalyst and facilitator, promoting the wise use of the global environment for sustainable development.

It provides leadership and encourages partnerships so people around the world can improve their quality of life while preserving the planet's natural capital for future generations.

UNEP assesses environmental conditions and trends; helps to develop legal instruments; strengthens institutions; facilitates the transfer of knowledge and technology; and integrates environmental protection into economic development.

Around the globe, and around the clock, UNEP staff work with governments, business partners and civil society, helping them to place the environment at the heart of their planning and action.

Inspired by the TV series '24', this exhibition provides a snapshot of UNEP's year-round work, compressed and simplified into a 24-hour time-frame. Any resemblance to actual characters or events is entirely intentional. The staff members you see are real. So is the work they do.
