

melting ice a hot topic?

ask an indigenous person

Arctic communities, including indigenous people striving to maintain and adapt traditional lifestyles, are particularly vulnerable to environmental change. The Arctic is home to some 4 million people, of whom roughly 10 per cent (400,000) are indigenous. Concentrations vary, from the Inuit, who comprise 85 per cent of the population of the Nunavut territory in Canada, to the Sámi, who account for 2.5 per cent of the population in northern Scandinavia and the Kola Peninsula.

UNEP

United Nations Environment Programme
www.unep.org/wed/2007